Biography

Robert Richardson, who joined CSI last year as Editorial Director, has worked in IT for fifteen years. He's based outside Philadelphia, where he also serves as an adjunct teacher of computer science at Swarthmore College.

Richardson served as Senior Editor of CMP's Communications Convergence magazine for two years, where his beats included telecom security, wireless, Internet messaging, and next-generation phone systems. Before that, Robert was a frequent contributor to magazines and web publications such as Ziff-Davis Internet Computing, BYTE, Network Magazine, and Small Business Computing. His first book, web.guide, was published by Sybex in 1995. Building Your Own High-Tech Small Office was published by IDG in Spring 1999.

Prior to embarking on his consulting and writing career several years ago, Robert was a network applications programmer and WAN administrator. He earned a BA in English at Oberlin College.
